Collaboration Nation

Three well-loved brands team up with edgy, fashion-forward individuals to churn out this season's hottest looks

WORDS RACHEL LIM

STOMPING GROUND

Model Agyness Deyn is rarely seen out of her trusty Dr Martens. Now, the pair has taken their relationship to the next level by collaborating on a limited edition collection based on Deyn's androgynous style and her love for all things vintage.

The collection very much adheres to a British fashion sensibility. Reversible bomber jackets and jumpsuits are juxtaposed with lace-trimmed dresses and cropped fleece tees. Varsity-style cardigans also make an appearance, as do Dr Marten's signature lace-up velvet Creepers in its signature black and cherry red.

GOING FOR THE GOLD

Once described by photographer Helmut Newton as a "fashion maniac," Anna Dello Russo is the current fashion director of Vogue Japan and one of contemporary fashion's driving forces. Unabashedly glamorous, precious and playful, Anna Dello Russo and her latest collection with H&M carries an ornamental opulence in animal appliqué, classy clutches, theatrical sunglasses and shoes sporting Dello Russo's trademark stiletto heels.

"Accessories are like vitamins to fashion: you should use them liberally as such," commented Dello Russo. Truer words have never been spoken.

UNDERCOVER AGENT

Uniqlo has announced the final collection in its collaborative design project with acclaimed designer Jun Takahashi of the cult-hit fashion label Undercover – an acclaimed Japanese designer known for blending a distinctively punk-inspired aesthetic with elements of modern street fashion.

The 31-piece collection includes jackets, tunics, hoodies and jeans in a autumn-appropriate colour palette of wine, olive, grey and black. Notable pieces include knitwear dresses and cardigans, jeans with side zips and dark tunics with ribbon detailing.
